

Habit Loops

Habitual tracking of sleep with little behavioral change. Sleep might not be great, but don't know what to change, or not having the time or energy to do changes.

Benefit from waking up softly with the gradual alarm and wake up window, and getting a glimpse into what the night was like with the journal.

Might be using sleep aid to drift off more easily.

Actively trying to improve sleep or wellness by implementing changes to daily life, sleep environment, medication, exercise etc.

Benefitting more from detailed tracking of multiple parameters, perhaps in sync with other apps tracking changes.

Analysing results of changes thoroughly. Getting a lot of value from the app in its supporting of this improvement phase.

Having matured into a more stable phase, tracking is second nature and most patterns are figured out by now. Sleep is good and predictable.

Daily review of tracking is done quickly based on long experience, with the purpose of catching outliers, like signs of a cold coming up, or a spouse developing more snoring over time.

Periodical in-depth analysis over longer time periods, like glancing back over years of sleep data, reflecting on changes in family constellation, places lived and other slow moving factors impacting sleep.